Have you ever visited a museum and found the narrations in the self-guided-tour headsets a bit tedious? Slightly too clinical, perhaps? And have you ever noticed that God is rarely mentioned in art museums these days, unless in a cold, archaeological, “scientific” way? All of that is about to change.

Author-curator Stephen Auth takes you on a provocative and colorful journey through the history of Western art, interpreted through a lens of profound Christian faith — appropriately so since, in Auth's view, much of Western art expresses humanity's search for God, the Divine Artist-Creator.

Keynote Speaker: Stephen Auth

Stephen Auth has had a long career on Wall Street and is currently executive vice president and a chief investment officer of Federated Global Equities. Steve is a frequent guest on CNBC, Fox Business News, and Bloomberg TV, a long-standing participant in Barron's annual investment outlook panel. He earned his undergraduate degree at Princeton University, where he graduated summa cum laude, and his graduate degree at Harvard Business School, where he was a Baker Scholar.

Steve is a member of the Regnum Christi movement and sits on the national board of the Lumen Institute, which he helped found in New York. Steve and his wife, Evelyn, are involved in a number of apostolic activities, including New York City street missions and a spiritual tour of the Metropolitan Museum of Art called “Man's Search for God: A History of Art through the Prism of Faith.” He is author of two books: “Pilgrimage to the Museum” and “The Missionary of Wall Street”
